Gabriele d'Annunzio

L'allegoria dell'autunno

Auditorium

Gabriele d'Annunzio wanted to preserve on the premises of Il Vittoriale his two-seater S. V. A. airplane, the sole model in the world to have been customized for his needs, which he flew over Vienna on 9 August 1918 for the launching of 40,000 leaflets.

Its arrangement could have been nothing but spectacular and evocative: inside a large polygonal-shaped hall, namely the Auditorium.

Upstairs, the Auditorium hosts “A Tribute to d’Annunzio” that is an exhibition of permanent and travelling artworks by contemporary artists. Amongst the works belonging to the permanent collection, one may admire the Giorgio de Chirico’s sketches of “La figlia di Iorio” (The Daughter of Iorio), those illustrating “Parisina” by Mario Pompei and the sketches drawn by Enrico Del Debbio for “La città morta” (The Dead City). The travelling artworks are obviously different from time to time; but amongst those that have been hosted to date, we wish to mention “Corè” by Paolo Schmidlin and “Egeria” by Carlo Previtali. Apparently Gabriele was fond of them all because they were inspired by him and of inspiration to him; you and your guests will most certainly like them in turn.

Technical and organizational features of the Auditorium:

- Maximum accommodation capacity: 180 guests
- *May accommodate floral arrangements
- *May host musical accompaniment
- *Screens and projectors may be positioned

 (to the duty and expense of the organizer)*
